NOTE

As it was necessary to begin printing the book in July, in many cases occurrences of a later date are not recorded; deaths reported up to October have been included, however, in the Obituary.

It is well to bear in mind that a proof for correction cannot be sent unless there is an address. As any sort of correction, even well-meant attempts to cut down biographies, involves expense, it is requested that no alterations should be made unless absolutely necessary. Corrections must be made on the proofs themselves and not written out on separate slips of paper.

Any one who has had the Companionage of a British Order conferred on him and has not yet been included in Who's Who, is invited to write for a form on which to fill in particulars as to birth, parentage, career, etc., for the next edition.

EVENING STANDARD

Men and women who are particular in what they read unhesitatingly choose the "Evening Standard".

There is a literary tone and appeal to refinement about the "Evening Standard" which at once recommends it as London's first evening newspaper.

The twenty-four pages of the "Evening Standard" contain all that is important in the news of the day as well as full information on the City, the theatre and the world of fashion.

The famous "Londoner's Diary" is considered to be the finest feature of its kind in modern journalism.

The "Evening Standard" is London's First Evening Newspaper
